

Our Homes, Our Votes: Virtual Voter Engagement Strategies and Tools During the COVID-19 Pandemic

BECAUSE HOUSING IS BUILT WITH BALLOTS

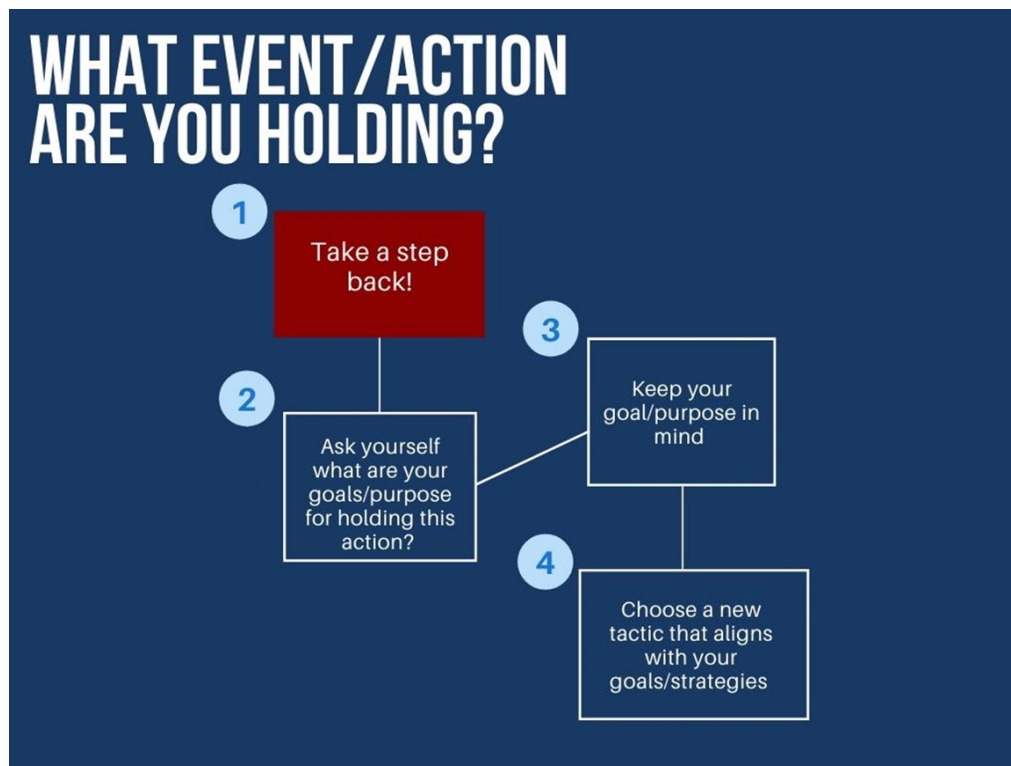

The COVID-19 pandemic presents a unique set of challenges to traditional voter registration, education, and mobilization strategies. Voter engagement efforts can and should still take place, but it will be important to consider when to transition to digital tactics while also keeping in mind potential barriers people may face in accessing digital platforms.

This guide considers voter engagement goals, traditional tactics used, physically distanced tactics, and examples of virtual tools and platforms for achieving similar outcomes. You can learn more about safety considerations and strategies for in-person events here.

The information in this guide was adapted from the Community Catalyst addendum: At a Safe Distance: Grassroots Organizing Strategies that Comply With Physical Distancing Protocols. This guide will be particularly helpful to people new to the world of digital organizing or who find they're relying on it much more heavily now.

Here's how it works:

The key is to avoid becoming fixated on knowing all the ins and outs of every virtual event platform available. Instead, always bring it back to your strategy. Think about the goals of the planned event and how those goals would traditionally be achieved, then find an equivalent digital organizing tactic!

The chart below provides some examples of physically distanced and virtual tactics based on the stage of voter engagement and your goals. If you are interested in learning more about digital platforms, you can look to Community Catalyst’s toolkit Let’s Talk about Tech: Databases and Platforms to Manage and Engage Your Network.
